STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA. ?

Lady May is the child of an Earl, And her rank and birth were early taught her ; W. N. PEDEN, [Seal.] JAS. T. MILLER, [Seal.] The other, a lovely, and loving girl Otherwise—only a miller's daughter.
But I do not marry the ancestors tall
That stare from Sir Robert's Gallery wall,
And the heiress, I fear, that fair work of art,
Hath just as much of a human heart.

Lady May lifts up or casts down The large blue eyes of the house of Nelville; But Katie's eyes are frank and brown, And the lashes droop on her cheek's soft level 'Tis strange to turn from that shadowy look, Where you read her thoughts like an open book, To stand in the light of the Lilly's gaze, And praise those eyes—that are used to praise.

Lady May! I was but a boy,
And you but a child, when this troth was plighed, And time has done much the bond to destroy Of hearts that were only half united Many a Lerd will woo a bride Who would crown his life with her stately pride. I ask not much thy patience to prove-My lady! I only ask for love!

From the Home Journal.

There is a current of simplicity running through hese original "Lilly and Rose" verses, which spark

And the pearls are not so white as the wearer.

That the ribbons look pale on her pretty head;

Katie's are brown with the sun of Summer;

And some one I know, finds it hard to choose

And with high-bred ease the lady stands

More than her timid greeting, speaks,

To love the Lilly more than the Rose.

And in my heart I cannot choose

To courteously greet the knightly comer. But the color on Katie's eloquent cheeks, les in the sunlight of their pretty fancies :

Lady May at the Hall, is fair, But Kate at the Mill is fairer;

Lady May wears pearls in her hair,

But Katie's cheeks are so lovely red,

The regal Lilly, or the rustic rose.

Lady May has little white hands-

Lady May! I did not need To lay hot words on your altar chilly, For I better had looked in a murkey weed For the love I sought, than this glossy Lilly, Love! a passion for village girls! Not for the daughter of noble Earls! And my Lilly lady smiles in scorn, And leaves me to seek of the lowly-born. Oh! Lady May! thy lands are wide,
Thou art the Neville's only heiress,
And, though thou be not a worshipped bride.
Thou still wilt be the first and fairest;

And to thee, who hast all, this little gold ring Would be but a very trifling thing— It would add not much to thy fortune's store; To me-it is all the world, and more. My Lady May, you did not love-You had no heart in your snowy breast; For we cannot expect to find a dove When we look in the golden eagle's nest. So keep your wealth of tower and hill, And I, sweet Katie of the mill;

And none shall know how I royally chose,

And left the Lilly to cherish the Rose. ware, who had been travelling from plantation to guage was used-" If we have not a Richard Cour his residence in Brunswick County, N. From the Detroit Free Press. Sharpe's rifles are an article in the creed of the negro-worshippers-a plank in their platform. They arm their missionaries to Kansas, not with Bibles, but with incendiary abolition publications and Sharpe's rifles. They declare their determination to abolitionize Kansas by force of Sharpe's rifles; and not only this, but it was seriously proposed in a black republican "Kansas aid" meeting at Albany, the rifles! We quote from a speech delivered at that meeting by Gerrit Smith: "There was one thing he (Smith) regretted to hear-that some of the leaders [of the free-State partv] in Kansas will not resist, &c. But they must other day, to attack slavery in the States with Sharpe's resist, and we must stand by them. "Would you obey the fugitive-slave bill? There may be men with souls so mean that they would do so But there are few such in our part of the State; for we rescued Jerry and walked him over that infamous act to freedom. "Would that some of our statesmen of the North, who enjoy largely the popular favor, would declare right out that slavery has no rights. If they would, slavery would soon become powerless. Many, North and South, are ready to des roy slavery, if some bold men would but begin the work. "His respected friend, Gov. Chase, of Ohio, had recently a noble opportunity; when the kidnappers came to take back those fugitives, he should have called out the State militia, and compelled the kidnappers to go back to Kentucky, or have shot them down." Behold the doctrine! Resistance in Kansas; nullification of the fugitive slave law by force; an unqualified declaration that slavery has no rights, and that it should be destroyed, also by force; the employment of the State militia by abolition governors to "shoot down" all southern men who seek to reclaim fugitives. Behold the doctrine! This meeting at which these doctrines were enunciated was held in the capital of the State of New York. It was not an assemblage of Garrison fanatics, but of leaders of the black republican Seward party. Among the subscriptions was one of one bundred dollars by the Albany Evening Journal, and another of the same amount by the Albany Register -the former Seward's recognized organ, and the latter lately bought up by the Seward interest. Gerrit Smith gave three thousand dollars, and Edward C. Delevan one thousand; "Peter G. Webster, of Fort Plain," contributed "a Sharpe's rifle." Mr. Hammond subscribed the price of a "rifle," and Mr. Northrop promised a "rifle;" and the Argus says the donations of the night were characterized as for ri-

We need not suggest the title of the paper to which Mr. Butler alluded. It must occur to every reader. It is the leading black republican journal in the United States. It gives shape, far more than any halfdozen of its negro-worshipping cotemporaries, to the policy of the negro-worshippers' party. We see what that policy is. It is force. It is the force of arms. "It is the incurnate spirit of bloodshed.
